justifiable the hon. member for Bathurst declining to furnish the Government with a written statement of his charge against Captain Mulholland, who would be placed in possession of it, and would thus be able to proceed against the hon. member in a court of law for libel. He suggested that the Government should make an inquiry without more ado, and that the inquiry should be enlarged so as to give the officers, who had been, perhaps, slandered by the men, the opportunity of clearing their characters from the insinuations that had been made. Many of them appeared in the public mind to be under a cloud, and they could only be relieved of the stigma which now rested upon them in that

Mr. WITHERS had taken every opportunity of satisfying himself as to the truth of the statements that had been made. He was quite sure that they were correct. In fact, he felt certain that the statements about the way in which the officers had behaved were correct. He was sure that the statements about the Contingent had stated in general terms that the officers were void of the instincts of the British officer. That was not to be particularly wondered at. They had served several years in India. One of the men who had called on him at his own house had made charges against the officers, proved to have served 68 days in gaol. He could not imagine the officers were so weak in gaol. He expressed his surprise at the hon. member for Bathurst having made such reckless charges, and hoped that a searching inquiry would be made. Should he hear the Contingent returned, he would question a private about the truth of the rumours that were afloat, and the private assured him that they were not true, and that they were made by a man who was a native of the Contingent, and who had been sent out. He thought this view of the matter was most likely to be correct, and that the charges could be traced to the black

Mr. CAMERON thought the grand advertisement of the colony was bearing fruit. It was useless, perhaps, to allude to the position taken up by Mr. Suttor in the first instance, but that when that gentleman had been seen in the colony, it was a great success. It was to be hoped for the sake of the Continent that a thorough and searching inquiry should be made into the matter, that the truth might be found out, and that the colony might be able to make should make the inquiry, but a tribunal appointed by the House. If they got a military tribunal they would get nothing like justice. He believed that the House should make an inquiry, and sympathize for the men who made charges against their officers simply because they themselves had to be amenable to discipline. Many of the men no doubt were guilty, but they were not all guilty. Something, however, had to be said for Mr. Suttor.

Mr. PURVES: It wants a good deal to be said about him.

Mr. CAMERON: Let there be an enquiry by members of the House who do not purport to serve the matter, and they would then see whether Mr. Suttor had told truth or falsehood. That gentleman had said what was being town talk, and had pledged himself to do so. It was a great success for the colony. In that Mr.

Suttor had made a mistake. He would not do the same as that gentleman. He would ask the Government to make an inquiry, and if the inquiry was made by a member of the Contingent as he was to Lieutenant Mulholland. He himself had known Lieutenant Mulholland since he was 16 years of age, and he had nothing to say against him. He had known him for 20 years, and he had taken from the member of the Contingent he had referred to—"The man's general reputation to us was that of a gentleman, and he was a very good fellow," he said. When he heard we had to go to the front his tail fell, and he was never happy till he heard we were ordered home. He was too lazy to look after anything. He washed his face with water, and he shaved with water. He had no water, and General Graham stopped the square, he accused Mulholland for the men having no water. He was absent on the only occasion when we were under fire, and when we were under fire he was the first to begin to grumble and said, "We won't go with such a man as Mulholland." Lieutenant Keating said, "Don't be afraid; the skipper is not going to let you go." He was not afraid of anything. At the officers' mess he was tight, and played tricks with cards and resorted to tricks of legerdemain. No man in No. 2 Company would serve under him again. We were a flag taken from the enemy. Their opinion of Mulholland was not as high one. These were the utterances of the man who had been charged with the duty of finding out the man's name. It was the duty of the Government to institute a searching inquiry into the matter. The charge might be false; it was to be listened to; but in the interest of the country, it was to be investigated. If this inquiry should be made, Hueston might be in the wrong; but it was better to know. Hueston had always appeared to him to be a very decent man. [Mr. WATSON: Hear, hear.] But if it should be found that he was a false witness, to drive him home; but if they were true, let the punishment follow which cowardice deserved.

Mr. W. J. FERGUSON had always considered Mr. Suttis a gentleman, and he regretted that that gentleman should have been charged with such a crime. He was surprised. The charges emanated from gentlemen who opposed the expedition to Egypt from first to last, and they endeavored to place contempt on all their soldiers and their valiant officers. He was sure that the Government and the people were prepared to resort to it. It was now the imperative duty of the Government to have an inquiry into the matter, and to know the truth, which was all that was wanted. If there would be a dissolution, and they would all be before the country, [Opposition Members: Oh! Oh! Hear, hear.]

Mr. DURDEKIN thought this matter had gone too far not to investigate it further. It might be unfortunate that reference had been made to the Government, but it was a fact that there had been the greatest incursion in connection with the Contingent. He had heard it said in all parts of the country that the Government had been deceived in their positions in every way. He also would suggest that a committee should be appointed to inquire into this matter. The hon. member for Bathurst had brought this matter up in the House, and he would suggest that the Government be reliable authority, and it was the duty of the member Secretary to take action in the matter. "It was absurd to suppose that the Government would ever do anything of the kind," he said. He was a member of the Executive Committee, and a Committee of this House would clear up this and other matters in connection with the Contingent.

Mr. W. CAMPBELL said that he agreed with the hon. member for Orange that the charge against Captain Mulholland was a very serious one, and that it was not in the heat of party politics, to spite the Government, and nothing else. He was surprised and sorry that Mr. Sturtevant should have formulated such a charge, and he hoped they should be able to clear up the matter.

Mr. MCULLOCH said that he also was surprised to hear such a charge made by the hon. member for Bathurst. Mr. Sturtevant, but that it was probably made in the heat of the moment. He was not a member of the Executive Committee of the Field of Mars Commission. The land was public property of which the public were entitled to receive the highest possible price. As sold in the present way, it would be sold at a very low price, and the Government would be deprived of the gains from its sale would have to be spent upon it in roads and bridges. If the Government insisted on selling the land at a low price, the public had no opportunity of getting it at a fair price, he should not hold himself at liberty to transfer his support to another

They also stipulated that the land was to be cut up in 5-acre blocks, which would be sold to the highest bidder. The city council was very much concerned to avoid the possibility of the land being sold on terms which would be very disadvantageous to the city. The council was also concerned to avoid the possibility of the land being sold on terms which would be very disadvantageous to the city. The council was also concerned to avoid the possibility of the land being sold on terms which would be very disadvantageous to the city.

Mr. PROCTOR contended that nearly every holding on Hunter's Hill was of from five to ten acres. The hon. member observed that he had never seen any of the land himself. ("Oh, oh.")

Mr. McCULLOUGH said that he had not seen any of the land in the district. It is just his Opposition to make such a charge.

Mr. GARRETT thought that the hon. member for Benoni would have said better if he had admitted a case to the House. From a personal knowledge of Lieutenant Mulholland, he did not believe one of the charges against him was true, and he would have levelled against him. The matter should be referred to a thoroughly independent tribunal, and not by a court-martial. An Hon. Member: Give the Government the names of the witnesses. The hon. member: The Government member: The present Government. The Government member was going out in a week? (Laughter.) [An Hon. Member: Going out for a picnic in a week.] They were sent to the front. The hon. member: That they might be sent to the Major-General Richardson, but he for one was not prepared to lay the free right of speech of members of the House at the disposal of Major Richardson. He was sorry that the discussion had business, but considering the way in which the press had been set at work to hunt down the hon. member for Bathurst, he considered that the hon. gentleman was perfectly justified in taking the earliest opportunity of making the statement which had led to the debate. He hoped that the Government would see that it was their duty as the legitimate

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 23, 1885.

There is one point in Mr. SUTTON'S favour—his explanation has been indicated enough by the consciousness of the fact that his conduct as Lieutenant MITCHELLMAN'S case required explanation and defence. But whilst he was apparently able to see that, he seems to have laboured under the disadvantage of an imperfect understanding of his position. His advice to the Government as to its duty would have had more weight had he first displayed a more accurate notion of his own. It may be doubted whether he showed a nice sense of duty in closing what was really a personal explanation with a motion for the adjournment of the House, that was certain to raise a cloud of dust, in the midst of which the original issue might well be lost sight of. As a matter of fact, he opened the way to the repetition in the House of all sorts of gossip about the officers of the Contingent, to which up to that point no member of the House had thought fit to give publicity. Under cover of that, the hon. member may possibly have found some consolation, but it can hardly be of much value.

MR. STURRO spoke last night of the statement which he had made being a matter of common report, and he seemed to think that having heard it confirmed on what he stated to be good authority, on what he stated to be open but to call the attention of the Government to it. Unfortunately for him, however, I am confirmed what he said as to the currency of the rumour. They had heard it, and heard it in public places. But why did it not occur to them as well as to him that there was no course open to them but to repeat the rumour before the House and then decline to furnish particulars for the foundation of an inquiry? Mr. O'CONNOR, Mr. McLELLON, Mr. FLEMING, and Mr. ARDRAUGH were all cognisant of this rumour; but all had carefully avoided its repetition in the House. It was only the hon. member for Bathurst who felt bound to rush in where they had feared to tread. The curious point of the case is that this sense of obligation should have arisen in the hon. member's mind in the midst of a party speech against the Government upon an amendment on the Address, and that in the first instance the name of the person charged was not given. As a result of moving the adjournment of the House, efforts were made by some speakers to raise the issue that in any way or other the dignity and privilege of the House were — I am sure the hon. member would have been called before a court-martial and be examined about his words in Parliament? But that was an issue foreign to the dispute. Mr. SUTTON had brought his own conduct before the House by undertaking to explain it. The real question, then, was whether he had done well or ill in publishing a gross accusation in the Assembly and declining to supply the Government with the particulars necessary to an effective inquiry. Mr. SUTTON strove to make a point by dwelling upon the omission of his reply to the MINISTER from the published correspondence. The reply, when read, in no degree improved his case. The substance of it, as published, did not lead the public, as the hon. member seems to think, to the conclusion that he had withdrawn the charge. Nothing of the kind. He declined to assist the Government to investigate it. He now says that he declined to act as prosecutor. He was not asked to act as prosecutor. He was simply asked to put his charge in shape, to say when and where the alleged offence was committed, and to give the names of the witnesses who were to prove the commission. As we have already said, no request could have been fairer. But it was a request that put to the test the bona fides of the hon. member's desire for an investigation. He refused to become a prosecutor has really been forced into the discussion, and was only a degree less absurd than Mr. GAZZETT's suggestion.

The body of a seaman named Joseph M. Cornish, belonging to the French war vessel Duchaffet, was found floating in Sydney Cove yesterday morning. The body was recovered by the crew of a tugboat close to the stern of the steamer Belgio. The water police conveyed it to the Circular Quay Morgue. The matter has been reported to the City Coroner, and an inquiry will take place at 10.30 a.m. to-day, at the Soudan Hotel, George-street North.

On Monday afternoon the Parramatta District Coroner, Mr. J. E. Bowden, held an inquest at the Parramatta Hospital on the body of a man named

The Legislative Assembly met at half-past 7 o'clock yesterday. Seven o'clock was nominally the hour, but half an hour's grace is always allowed. There was an unusually long list of questions to which Ministers had to make reply; but hon. members, having been to the races, were somewhat talkative, and very few of the answers were audible in the gallery. The adjournment was ordered for 10 o'clock, and Ministers were ordered to make an explanation respecting his accusation against Lieutenant Mulholland. The debate on this was kept up until 11 o'clock, when the motion was negatived. There being a universal feeling that it was then too late to do any business, the motion "that the House do now adjourn" was put, and carried by Mr. Dibbs, and after a few words from Mr. Burns, was agreed to.

Mr. Storr's motion for the adjournment of the House, to enable him to make an explanation with regard to Captain Mulholland's letter in the morning papers, was submitted as soon as the questions had been out and answered. Mr. Suttor, of course, could have said all that wanted saying in a "public explanation," but, which, according to the rules of the House, the debate would have been out of order, but the motion for the adjournment of the House opened the flood-gates of talk. Mr. Suttor complained that his reply to the Colonial Secretary was not included in the papers that had been put on his table. He pointed out that the papers had been put on his table in reference to the Colonial Secretary's communication, as the Consequently her mails, which, had it not been for the accident, would in all probability have arrived in Sydney on Saturday last, will not reach here till about Saturday next.

On the invitation of Sir John Hay, President of the Legislative Council, between 90 and 100 guests assembled at dinner on Monday evening, in the Parliamentary refreshment-room. Among the guests present were Sir Alfred Stephen (Lieutenant-Governor), Hon. E. Barton (Speaker of the Legislative Assembly), Dr. J. A. Collins (Attorney-General), Mr. J. A. Collins (Attorney-General), Mr. Justice Faneuil, Mr. Justice Windeyer, Mr. Justice Innes, Hon. W. B. Dalley, Q.C. (Attorney-General and Representative of the Government in the Upper House), Hon. F. M. Darley, Q.C., M.L.C., Hon. G. R. Dibbs (Colonial Treasurer), Sir Patrick Rogers, M.L.A., Rev. Principal Kinross, and many other representatives of the public, and the heads of departments in the public service. The usual loyal toasts were proposed by the president, who in doing so gracefully referred to the various official branches represented at the dinner. The dinner was afterwards continued to its social and genial tone, and was not rendered at all formal or uninteresting by the conclusion of the dinner Mr. Dalley proposed the toast of "Our Host and Chairman," in which, after a reference to the goodwill created by such a friendly gathering as that of Monday evening, he eulogised the guest of Sir John Hay during his stay in the colony, and the public by his invitation to the dinner by the names mentioned above.

24 FEET (contiguous to PHILIP STREET)

BATT, RODD, and PURVES have received instructions to sell by public auctions, at their Rooms, 33, PIT STREET, on TUESDAY, 6th October, at 11.50 a.m.

The LEASE for 99 (ninety-nine) years, with the right securing the FREEHOLD at any time during the years by paying 20 YEARS GROUND RENT (equal only a 3 per cent. rental), of
The above VALUABLE BLOCK OF CITY LAND, at the corner of PHILLIP and BENT STREETS, together with the premises thereon, bringing in a nominal rent of £156 per annum.

THE ADVANTAGE to the PURCHASER in securing the Lessee of this splendid City Block on these EXCEPTIONAL LIBERAL TERMS is obvious.

Who can say what the FREEHOLD MAY NOT BE WORTH in a FEW YEARS (much less in 99 years), yet this he will have the option of securing at only a 20 years' purchase of its present rental value, and at ANY TIME DURING THE CUR-RENCY OF THE LEASE.

SOLICITORS for the Vendor—

By order of the TRUSTEES in the Estate of the late Mr.
MICHAEL M'QUIRK.
